AFTER a disastrous career in Bollywood, Iqbal hit the jackpot on small screen, thanks to his launch vehicle Kaisa Yeh Pyaar Hai. One after another, his shows became successful. However, in midst of all this, he suddenly decided to take a break. Eventually, he quit Balaji Telefilms which came as a shocker for the industry.

Since then, he has not worked with Balaji and Ekta Kapoor. Ask Iqbal and he says, "I just wanted to take a break. It was much later I took up other shows. Probably, I did not get any exciting offer from Balaji and I could not work with them."

But, is there any animosity since he is not visible in Ekta's parties despite being one of her former blue-eyed boys?

"I guess, this is like digging out old graves. I thought that I was entangling myself too much into work and social dos. So, I cut down on the parties and in fact I don't go for most of the TV parties unless and until it's a social obligation. There is no animosity between us at all. She is going great guns with her shows which are working big time and I respect her immensely for the professional she is," he says setting the record straight.

On the work front, Iqbal is currently busy with his show Waaris on Zee, a family drama apparently inspired by Ram Gopal Verma's Sarkar. The show is produced by Smriti Irani.

What about acting with her? "It would be great if she acts in the show. I only know her as a producer and having her in the show would be a great idea. It would in fact add value to the show," he concludes.
